

Twitter: "Don't talk bad about childhood anal sex!"

The Twitter police have suspended a popular Christian blogger for criticizing a Teen Vogue editor who published an article encouraging teens to have anal sex.

Grace Elizabeth Johnston, who goes by the online name of "The Activist Mommy," received notice last week that she had been banned from Twitter because of an Aug. 16 tweet she wrote in response to Philip Bicardi, the digital editor of Teen Vogue.

In July, Teen Vogue published a "tutorial" for its young readers on how to have anal sex. The article by "sex educator" Gigi Engle was titled "Anal Sex: What You Need to Know," and featured instructions on the dos and don'ts of consensual sodomy-never mentioning the fact that many of the magazine's readers are under the legal age of consent.

"This is anal 101, for teens, beginners, and all inquisitive folk," Engle wrote, describing anal sex as "a perfectly natural way to engage in sexual activity." Among other helpful advice, Engle offered counsel regarding which lube to use and instructed her young readers how to insert sex toys into their butts to "warm up" for "larger objects." She also advised them to get over their natural abhorrence with coming in contact with someone else's "poop."

So there you have it - if you are a concerned mom that does not agree with your kids reading this type of thing, YOU ARE BANNED on Twitter! There's a lot more to this confirmed true and disgusting story here